CTP: Restoring LA. with LouisianaRebuilds.info

In this first year after Hurricanes Katrina and Rita, Carrollton Technology Partners has been involved in several important projects dedicated to the recovery effort. One of these projects is LouisianaRebuilds.info – a collaborative effort between nonprofits and government agencies.

Governor Blanco launched the CTP designed and developed LouisianaRebuilds.info site March 9, 2006. The site was born of another project spearheaded by CTP - the Louisiana Family Recovery Corps. In the early stages of compiling important resources to link from the LFRC website, it became evident that a more thorough information portal was needed to allow displaced residents to access recovery information.

A team of dedicated nonprofits and government organizations - including Louisiana Association of Nonprofits, Greater New Orleans Nonprofit Knowledge-works, Louisiana Recovery Authority, Policylink, One Economy, and more - came together with CTP to create LouisianaRebuilds.info.

This site is a portal providing Louisiana residents with links to services, resources, support networks, and other vital information to help rebuild their lives, their communities, and their state. The site pulls together a wealth of information into one central location and as such it is "your first stop on the way home." Residents can find information about rebuilding, schools and childcare, health and safety, neighborhood organizations, and community groups.

CTP built the site using a unique content management system and also maintains and hosts the site. Content is generated by a steering committee and is directed by Editor in Chief Deborah Cotton.

meet Chris Reade

Christopher Reade is the managing partner of Carrollton Technology Partners. He says that

"It's taken a few tries to get it right, but I have always had the entrepreneurial bug,"

After graduating from Rutgers University, Chris and a few friends started a company called Avalon Internetworking Corporation in downtown Manhattan. Founded during the internet boom and the debut of such mega-corporations as Netscape and Yahoo!, Avalon provided internet email to businesses.

While it wasn't a huge success in the beginning, Chris and his partners expanded to website development, eCommerce, and other web-based products and services and the company grew into a successful venture.

Born a New Yorker, Chris yearned to leave the annoyances and high costs of the city. "New Orleans had been a place I'd always wanted to live. New Orleans seemed like the kind of place you would be proud to tell people you are from." Chris and his wife, Kendra, moved to New Orleans in 1999. Born of a merge between Chris' Avalon and Charles Suhren's PCMD, CTP has quickly grown to an operation to employing over a dozen folks including programmers, designers and other consultants. The company provides web services, programming and networking as well as hosting and email. It has over 125 active clients and is continuing to grow.

"Along the way there have been failures; however, on the whole we've been able to move forward, learn from these mistakes and create real change and progress through the work that we've done."

tech tips

We are all aware that viruses are circulating around the internet, email inboxes, and, perhaps, your own computer, but what can we do to avoid getting attacked?

First, obtain some antivirus software; if you do not have an antivirus program on your PC, try AVG – which is free to use and available to download from www.download.com. For paid protection, Symantec and Trend Micro are good choices because they include additional features (scheduled scans, automatic updates, etc) and have a lot of support.

Secondly, update the program to get the most recent virus protection, and continue to do so at least once every week.

Lastly, scan your entire computer to check for viruses at least twice every week. New viruses appear every day, so unless you keep your antivirus software up-to-date, your PC could be vulnerable.
